U.S. Aide Indicates Retreat on Tax Cuts

By Herbert H. Denton

Washington Part Service
WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan has indicated for the first time that the administration might be willing to drop one important part of last year's tax-cut bill—the provision "indexing" taxes to inflation after

But Mr. Regan said the adminis-tration would only be willing to withdraw the indexing provision if Congress agrees to use the increased revenue to reduce the federal budget deficit.

Indexing provides for automatic adjustments to prevent inflation from pushing Americans into ever-higher income tax brackets, a phenomenon known as "bracket creep." Under this provision, per-sonal tax exemptions and tax rates in all brackets would be adjusted to reflect inflation's effect in the previous year.

"If you want higher revenues to spend, that's a no-no as far as we're concerned because we don't want more spending by the federal government; we want less spending by the federal government," Mr. Regan said Saturday during a U.S. television interview.

Meanwhile, senior White House advisers held a first meeting with a team of governors Saturday in an effort to resolve differences over the president's proposal to shift control of federal programs to the states. The results were called in-

Until now the administration had resisted pressure from worried leaders in Congress for changes in tax and budget policy to reduce deficits. Congressional budget experts have singled out President Reagan's plans for a large-scale military buildup and the indexing provision as primary causes of the escalating deficits predicted in coming years. Indexing is scheduled to take effect in the 1984 budget year, which begins Oct. 1, 1983.

Firm on Tax Cut

The Treasury secretary made it clear Saturday that the administration still refuses to consider changse tax cut that is to lead up to the start of indexing. There have been calls in Congress for the president to postpone the final 10 percent tax cut, which is scheduled for July 1, 1983, but Mr.

WASHINGTON - Without actually changing policy, the Reagan administration is suggesting that the president has virtually ruled out sending U.S. troops to El Sal-

President Reagan previously has said only that he had "no plans" to send U.S. combat troops "any-place in the world" and has been careful not to go beyond that for-

Now the emphasis has chang Aides are saying privately that Mr. Reagan has all but ruled out such Reagan has an out intended out standard use of troops, that he doubts the Pentagon could win a short-term victory in El Salvador except with a large commitment that would involve diversion of U.S. forces from other vital regions, and that in any case he doubts such a victory would produce stability in the region over the long run.

Byrd's Proposal

The remarks come amid rising political uneasiness over Mr. Reagan's intentions in Latin America. On Saturday, Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, a West Virginia Democrat, said he will introduce an amendment to the War Powers Act that would require prior congressional approval before U.S. combat troops could be sent to El Salvador.

The act, passed in 1973, allows the president to commit troops to combat on his own but requires him to seek congressional approval of such action within 60 days. Larry Speakes, the White House deputy press secretary, said Saturday that such an amendment is not necessary. While refusing to rule out military action as an option, Mr. Speakes said that the administration believes that the U.S.-backed El Salvador government can prevail against rebel troops with U.S. military assistance but without U.S. combat forces.

Sen. Byrd said he was worried about a heating up of administra-tion rhetoric on El Salvador and the possible future use of troops "I don't want to see escalating rhetoric followed by escalating in-volvement ... such as we had in Vietnam," he said.

'Exaggerated Idea'

Earlier, Mr. Speakes said that the notion of sending U.S. troops to El Salvador is "an exaggerated

Another official said the administration is engaged in "political warfare" with opponents of its El Salvador policy and added that there have never been any plans to send U.S. forces into El Salvador beyond the few advisers who are helping to train Salvadoran sol-Administration officials acknowledged, however, that they face a difficult political problem on the troops issue because President Reagan has refused to flatly rule out use of U.S. combat forces in the region. Mr. Reagan contends that an absolute pledge not to send forces would give the rebels assurance that might make it more difficult for the El Salvador government to prevail.

In El Salvador, Mr. Reagan would like the sending of U.S. troops to be seen as a last-ditch option if the rebels appear to be winning. On Capitol Hill, Mr. Reagan would like congressional leaders to accept the pledge that no use of U.S. troops is contemplated.

While Mr. Speakes was talking to reporters in the White House press center in Santa Barbara, Calif., 18 miles (29 kilometers) from the president's mountaintop retreat, about 200 people across the street from the press center demonstrated against U.S. inter-vention in El Salvador.

The first U.S. reaction was cool; U.S. officials noted that the Mexican plan did not explicitly address the question of Nicaraguan support for rebels in El Salvador.

SAN SALVADOR - The capture of a Nicaraguan "military man" that U.S. Secretary of State

In a statement from Mexico City, the Mexican government denied the Salvadoran reports. The undersecretary of Foreign Affairs, Alfonso Rosenzweig Diaz, said the Nicaraguan was a student at the Autonomous University of Nuevo León in Monterrey, Mexico, who was traveling home by road during a semester break.

Mr. Rosenzweig and Foreign Ministry spokesmen said the stu-dent had convinced the Salvadoran police that he had a "contact man" in the Mexican Embassy whom he was willing to turn in.

Barged on Door

Taken to the embassy by two security officials, the Mexicans said, the Nicaraguan, who was identified in all versions of the story as Legdamis Anaxis Gutierrez, broke away from the officials, banged on the door and told the charge d'affaires, Carlos Eduardo Amezquita, that he was a Nicaraguan seeking asylum. Mr. Amezquita barred the door to the pursuing Salvadorans, the Mexicans said. Mr. Gutierrez, the Mexican spokesman said, "was not pulled in the door by anybody." The Mexicans said they had verified Mr. Gutierrez' student status with the rector of the Monterrey university. They said they have requested that he be permitted to leave El Salvador under diplomatic protection.

Mexico, which has advocated a negotiated solution to the Salvadoran conflict, has strained relations with the government here and maintains a staff of only three embassy officials

CIA Is Said to Finance Propaganda Broadcasts, Paramilitary Units

By Leslie H. Gelb

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The United States is secretly aiding Iranian paramilitary and political exile groups and beaming radio propagan-da into Iran to counter growing Soviet influence there and to play a role of its own in the event that Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's Islamic regime falters, according to Western intelligence officials and other sources.

The Western intelligence sources insisted, however, that no efforts were being made to overthrow or destabilize the Islamic fundamentalist government. The goal of the program, which is being run by the Central Intelligence Agency, is said to be to knit together a coalition of exile groups

But all of the sources agreed that the CIA had had no success in persuading the contend-ing factions to work together. The factions are generally described as at least as interested in destroying each other as in fighting the Kho-

Two non-American sources who provided initial information about the covert operations of both Moscow and Washington gave the impression that they were concerned that U.S. ties to exile leaders who had no chance of gaining power in Iran were shackling the United States to a losing cause. In particular, they said, they were concerned about any U.S. identification with the family and supporters of the late shan and with Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, the former Iranian president who fled his country last year.

According to Western intelligence officials, the larger of the two paramilitary units, based in eastern Turkey, has 6,000 to 8,000 men, mostly Iranian exiles but also Kurds, under the command of former Rear Adm. Ahmad Madani. Adm. Madani was commander in chief of the Iranian Navy under the shah and was court-martialed by the shah for "being against the government. He was also the first defense minister in Ayatollah Khomeini's government and ran un-successfully for president in 1980 against Mr. Bani-Sadr. He is generally described as neither an Islamic revolutionary nor a monarchist and tries to project the image of a strongman. The second unit, described by the sources as no more than about 2,000 men, is commanded by Gen. Bahram Aryana, the former chief of staff of the Iranian Army under the shah. This unit may be part of an organization of former pro-monarchist military officers known as Azadegan, which Gen. Aryana also leads. Two U.S. advisers to the program and the head of El Salvador's Institute for Agrarian Transformation were assassinated in the coffee shop of the Sheraton Hotel in January of last year.

The first phase of the program expropriated all estates larger than 1,235 acres, providing compensation to the former owners, and converted the estates to peasant cooperatives. Under Phase II similar expropriation and conversion would be extended to farms of more than 247

On April 29, 1980, Phase III, known as he "land-to-the-tiller" law, was decreed.

U.S. and some Salvadoran officials oppose the second phase for political and economic reasons. The farms that would be affected are owned by middle- and upper-middle-class Salvadorans, and the ciilian-military government, trying to broaden its support, does not want to al-ienate them. U.S. and Salvadoran officials also worry that any interference with these farms, which generate the bulk of the country's export earnings, would damage El Salvador's already battered economy.

The U.S. ambassador, Deane R. Hinton, recently acclaimed the redistribution as "the most revolutionary land reform in Latin American history."

A Salvadoran university professor sympathetic to the social and economic goals of the leftist rebels countered: "It is not revolutionary because it is not designed to benefit the people, but to isolate and de-stroy the left. I don't say there is no re-form, but it is so insignificant that gigantic repression is needed against the peasants."

And on the right, one of the country's major newspapers. El Diario de Hoy, declared in an editorial that the program will have the same consequences as the one imposed by the United States in Vietnam: "a mortal blow to the economy of the coun-

> "It is unquestionable that this agrarian reform has moved the country forward inches, and that is a tremendous leat," said the university professor. But he argued that, because Phase II has not been carried out, there has not been a meaningful shift of wealth.

Almost all of El Salvador's coffee, the country's most important cash crop, is grown on farms of 247 to 1,235 acres, those that would be converted under Phase II.

Access to credit and financing has been a major problem, especially on the Phase I cooperatives. Along with the land redistri-bution announced in March, 1980, the government also nationalized the banks, largely to make more credit available to the cooperatives.

The credit problem is in evidence at San Cayetano, once a lucrative cattle ranch owned by one of the country's wealthiest families. Anticipating the government's expropriation, the owners rushed about 900 dairy and beef cattle to Guatemala and the slaughterhouse.

"African heads of state should urgently declare null and word the irresponsible actions taken in Addis Ababa last week by the OAU's secretary-general under pressure from Algeria and other activist countries," said Abdelhaq Tazi, the Moroccan secretary of state, in an interview. He called for the resignation of the OAU secretary-general, Edem. Kodjo of Togo.

Nineteen OAU states boycotted the final session of OAU foreign ministers as part of a Moroccan-led protest over the seating of the Polisario Front as the Sahara Arab Democratic Republic, and Mr. Tazi raised the possibility that the 19 would torpedo the OAU summit meeting in Tripoli next August.

But he said Morocco stood by earlier OAU decisions to push for a cease-fire and an internationally supervised referendum in the Western Sahara, where its forces are lighting Polisario guerrillas.

Western intelligence sources said that the one benefit so far has been that these groups provide the main source of intelligence on Iran. Administration sources said, however, that there has been little opportunity to check the reliability the information.

Western intelligence sources recognize that these networks serve their own interests in portraying Soviet influence in order to gen-erate more U.S. support for themselves. These networks, plus what little is left of Western intelligence in the area and U.S. surveillance of Iran, have produced the following outline of Soviet covert activity since the Islamic revolution.

Soviet Actions

At the beginning of the revolu-tion in late 1978, with Ayatollah Khomeini attacking the Soviet Un-ion and its Iranian supporters al-most as sharply as he did the United States, Moscow operated mostly around the edges of Iran. Some money and arms were provided to Kurds, Azerbaijanis, and Baluchis — the leading minority groups in Iran — and it seemed that Moscow might be trying to fragment the entirely clear, Moscow either stopped the aid or reduced it to a level where it became unnoticed. In the meantime, Moscow was sending some Moslem Soviet citi-zens to infiltrate the Muiahidin, an Islamic fundamentalist guerrilla movement, apparently with little success, and the Fedayeen Khalqor People's Fighters, a secular Marxist group, apparently with better

At the same time, Moscow was building up its divisions on the Iranian border to about 24, an increase of two, and increasing the readiness of these forces. But these are not the best Soviet troops, and Western intelligence sources insist that recent reports of a continuing significant Soviet buildup on Iran's borders are inaccurate.

All the while, the National Voice of Iran, situated in the Soviet city of Baku, broadcast support for the revolution and warnings against "American imperialism and secret U.S. plots to overturn the revolution.

Growing Contacts

Western intelligence analysts maintain that the best measure of the effectiveness of the Tudeh Party and other Soviet supporters in Iran has been the growing open contacts and dealings between Iran and the Soviet Union and nations friendly to Moscow. These analysts speculate that this is a major reason for Moscow's probably having scrapped its initial strategy Soviet Embassy personnel in Tehran are said to number nearly 200, almost four times the number in the days of the shah. Soviet allies and friends such as Libya, North Korea and Syria are providing Iran with arms and technical advisers.

Recently, and most significantly, the Soviet Union and Iran signed agreements for Soviet aid in building and running two gaspowered electric plants. At the time of the signing, Iran's energy minister, Hasan Ghafurifard, said, We consider the Soviet Union a friendly country." This was a substantial change from the establish-ed Iranian line that the United States and the Soviet Union were virtually equal "Satans."

Glemp, Despite Strains With State, Emphasizes Polish Reconciliation

WARSAW - Poland's Roman Catholic primate said Sunday that the Polish church could be facing the most delicate moment in its Archbishop Jozef Glemp made the remarks in a sermon to a packed congregation at St. Michael's Church in Warsaw amid signs of mounting strains in church-state relations after nearly three months of martial law.

But in reiterating a call for national reconciliation, Archbishop Glemp avoided mention of the latest conflicts over the imprisonment

He also said Poland was eagerly awaiting the return of Pope John Paul II to his homeland for a visit in August.

In London, The Sunday Times reported that Archbishop Glemp, seeking a "summit meeting" with the country's martial law ruler, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, within the next two weeks.

In a dispatch from Warsaw, the newspaper quoted church sources as saying Archbishop Glemp was "concerned about strained church-state relations and the danger posed by growing underground resistance to the martial law authorities." It said he was hoping to "revive the dialogue between church and state at the highest level before it's too late."

The two leaders are believed to have met last in early January at Gen. Jaruzelski's request.

The Times said that Archbishop Glemp, in "private audiences with Western visitors last week," had made known he was worried about the possibility that young people might stage some kind of uprising in the spring or summer months which would result in much bloodshed." In his sermon in Warsaw, the archbishop said "the Polish church today faces a gigantic task, per-haps more delicate than any other in our thousand-year history."

His renewed call for national dialogue followed reports that the leader of the suspended Solidarity free trade union, Lech Walesa, would be allowed out of detention for the first time since Dec. 13.

News that Mr. Walesa would be allowed home for the christening of his baby daughter was given to Western reporters by his wife, Danuta. Mrs. Walesa said the baptism would take place March 21 and said she expected to have her husband home with her and the seven children in Gdansk during

The primate pointed out that the 600th anniversary celebrations of the shrine of Gora, the formal occasion for the visit, would last into 1983.

Other student researchers and members of Parliament said they believed the Americans were most resented by paid British staffers, with whom they compete for scarce work space and facilities.

"When they see a lot of extra bodies around, they notice the for-

The 635 members of Parliament have 900 secretaries and 200 re-searchers, paid and unpaid, work-ing in an old office building out-side the Palace of Westminister, compared to the thousands of staffers in numerous large office buildings in Washington for 635 representatives and senators.

GENEVA -- East European and Latin American delegations are engaged in a prolonged filibuster at the current session of the United Nations Human Rights Commis sion in an apparent effort to cur-tail debate on Poland, El Salvador, Guatemala and Iran. ### Laker Reportedly Seeks Financing For a Smaller, Full-Fare Airline The Associated Press

LONDON — A month after the collapse of Laker Airways, Sir Freddie Laker is circulating plans for a Laker II airline — smaller, leaner and definitely not cut-rate. The Sunday Times reported. The newspaper said it had obtained a copy of a prospectus prepared by Sir Freddie and his backers that "is now doing the rounds" of London financial institutions in search of support worth £105 million ($192 million).

The paper said Sir Freddie would fly with only five aircraft and 770 employees, compared with 13 aircraft and 2,795 employees before, and would concentrate on services from Gatwick Airport, south of London, to Los Angeles, Miami and New York.

"But most significant of all is the total rejection of the old buccaneering days of price-cutting." The Times said. "It is even suggested that the new airline might actually join IATA, the airlines' fare-fixing cartel against which Laker has campaigned for many years." IATA stands for International Air Transport Association

The document was prepared with the help of Roland W. Rowland, head of the Lonrho conglomerate and a possible partner in Laker II, the paper said.

The prospectus indicated that Sir Freddie believes Laker II could earn a "net profit before tax and financing charges" of £16.2 million ($29.6 million). The newspaper concluded, however, that this projection was the result of some "startlingly optimistic assumptions" by Sir Freddie.

"What we're seeing is an unholy alliance between the Latin Americans and East European countries to stall the commission," said Da-vid Weissbrodt, a professor at the University of Minnesota who is in Geneva as an observer. ## Ineffectual Oil Boycott

It's almost official: After months of wellpublicized indecision, President Reagan has resolved to stop U.S. oil trade with Libya.

The boycott will hardly be felt by Americans. But the damage to Libya's economy should also be modest. There is, then, a real question whether boycotts should be used for largely symbolic effect.

Reagan intends to halt oil imports that currently total 150,000 barrels a day, onesixth of Libya's production. He will also forbid the sale of American oil drilling equip-

By some criteria, this is the ideal moment for economic action against Col. Qadhafi's regime. The 150,000 barrels amount to less than I percent of U.S. consumption. In today's slack oil market, they can easily be replaced. Nor will U.S. exporters feel any pain; demand for their drilling equipment already exceeds production.

But Libya's vulnerability is similarly limited. It has had a tough time selling as much oil as it wants at the posted OPEC price; losing its U.S. contracts will make it a little tougher. Without cooperation from all other oil buyers, it is virtually impossible to make a big dent in Libvan oil revenues.

The same is true for the consequences of the equipment embargo. Libya's search for other manufacturers may cost some money and slow its development program, but it will hardly cripple Libya's economy.

Is it worth the trouble? The White House sees the embargo as a modest but important symbol of retaliation for Libya's acts of aggression and terrorism. Even if no other nations join in, the political statement might encourage Qadhafi's domestic opponents. And if Europe and Japan follow the U.S. lead, so much the better.

But Reagan has not made clear what Libyan conduct he aims to punish. Oadhafi has already yielded to pressure to withdraw his troops from Chad. If there is (or ever was) a Libyan assassination team loose in the United States, it does not appear active now.

The administration says Libya is also an international outlaw for shipping arms to the Palestine Liberation Organization. But other Arab oil exporters support the PLO. Singling out the colonel runs the risk of making him an anti-colonial martyr in many places.

A superpower, in any case, should never resort to sanctions casually. Economic boycotts should be used spaningly precisely because they so rarely accomplish any more than announcing anger.

Boycotts are preferable, of course, to military force. But something is lost when traditional trade relations are arbitrarily disrupted. And by imposing sanctions unilaterally, the United States loses the logic of its customary opposition to unilateral trade disruptions. The boycott of Libya, for example, weakens the U.S. case for continuing commerce with South Africa.

A more enlightened leadership in Libya would certainly be welcome. But there are limits to what the United States can - or should - do to force such a change. The oil boycott just doesn't seem worth the bother and political risks.

The National Security Council gathered in solemn conclave to lay out the facts for President Reagan. Secretary of Defense Weinberger, supported only by the UN delegate, Jeane Kirkpatrick, pointed out the danger of permitting the NATO allies to become dependent for their energy needs on the forces that NATO is in business to oppose. The United States must not intate its European allies, posited Haig, the former NATO commander, to whom every year is The Year of Europe. West German and French Socialists want that pipeline to the extent of enabling the Russians to build it without putting up a ruble. Besides, denying the license would only delay the

U.S. Should Take a Leaf From Trotsky's Book

NEW YORK — It is correct that two estimates of the current threat posed by the Soviet Union are at war with each other. They are, however, reconcilable, if only one would take the trouble. One school says the Soviet Union's might is decisive. The other says the Soviet Union is falling apart.

Years ago, the strategist and philosopher James Burnham said the United States chronically overestimates the Soviet Union's strength and underestimate its menace. Those were the days when the Soviet Union was not strong in international missilery, and now of course it is. But its weaknesses as a thermonuclear superpower in the '50s are replaced now by a weak-ness of a different order.

The Soviet Union is on its knees economically. And just as, in the '50s, by reason of a failure of resolution the United States stood by while the Soviet Union acquired its massive nuclear artillery, so now it stands by while Moscow wrestles with its economic weaknesses. In the '50s, Soviet sympathizers in the United States dispatched to Russia the secrets necessary to get on with its nuclear development. Today, U.S. businessmen and a Republican administration stand by passively while the Soviet Union takes such measures as are necessary to survive its economic ordeal. We now have the chairman of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, no less, taking issue

U.S. Budgetary Tactics

Another Health Hazard

March 8: From Our Pages of 75 and 50 Years Ago

You can hardly be expected to follow the to a fast start. This year, the administration U.S. budget game without a program. The following paragraphs attempt to outline the stages that are likely to be important in the next several months, and the tactical positions that seem to be developing.

On March 31, the continuing budget resolution expires. You may recall that Congress was never able to agree on several of the 1982 appropriations bills and, in the final convulsion last fall, kept the money flowing with a compromise that extends only through the first half of the fiscal year. It is probable that both houses will vote for a simple extension, but the measure covers the controversial areas of health, education and welfare, and it is possible that enough deficit-fearing senators will balk to block passage.

A more likely source of trouble is the final budget resolution setting spending limits for the current fiscal year. In passing it last fall, Congress simply ignored the fact that actual spending is running at least $40 billion above its legally binding limit. Now, if the budget process is to be kept intact, Congress must adopt a revision that approves an uncomfortably large deficit for 1982.

Congress also needs, however, to approve a first budget resolution for the next fiscal year — the one that is the subject of the current quarrel with the president. In the Senate. the target date for this event is March 31; in the House it is April 15. That doesn't leave much time for a great deal of work, if Congress is to come up with a specific proposal that differs substantially from Mr. Reagan's.

Last year, as the result of close negotiations between Reagan administration officials and Republican senators starting right after the election, the budget process got off

Six years ago, the U.S. Congress passed a law intended to end the practice of throwing hazardous chemicals into open pits and land-disposal system — about 130 billion pounds of hazardous wastes will be produced this year — that it took the Environmental Protection Agency four years and the threat of a court order to issue most of the regulations suspended or rescinded so many of the regulations that observers wondered whether its

to America have produced a most excellent imconvenience of waste generators.

Then in 1981 the Reagan EPA delayed, went its own way and congressional support for the Reagan budget is currently nil.

If all goes as planned — and much may not — the congressional alternatives will face their first tests in the April votes on the budget resolution. If there is strong bipartisan support for the alternatives — and if the administration is still sitting on the sidelines — the next play may well come when, sometime in May, federal spending pushes the federal debt over the legal limit.

Failure to raise the debt ceiling would cause a chaotic shutdown of many government operations and possible panic in the financial markets. House and Senate leaders see the debt ceiling bill as an opportunity to turn the tables on the administration, forcing it to accept the budget and tax changes that Congress wants — just as the administration forced Congress to accept further budget cuts by closing down the government last fall. One possible danger here is the temptation to overload the debt ceiling bill with too many conditions to be passable. Another is a simple collapse of support for any budget.

Despite the acknowledged perils, momentum behind a congressional alternative is currently strong. Voters are genuinely worried, and many Republicans — who worked diligently to advance the administration's program last year — are stung by the president's current strategy of lobbing brickbats at them from the safe distance of his Western tour. More important, responsible people in both parties realize, as the administration apparently does not, that the alternative is a stalemate over the budget - and, for the country, that is the greatest danger of all.

Tin Agreement

Your Feb. 24 and 25 reports on the tin market state that the International Tin Agreement is in limbo because the United States refused to agree to higher prices. U.S. opposition alone would be insuffi-cient to prevent increases in the price range for buffer stock operations. In fact, most main consuming nations share our view that the large increases sought by producers in the past year are unjustified either by the current market situation or prospects for future supplies. In January, 1982, virtually all consumers rejected producer at-tempts to establish a link between the agreement's price range and the artificial price now prevailing in the market. A commodity stabilization agreement is neither a price support mechanism nor a re-source transfer, as much as some producers might like it to be so.

I am referring to the item dug up by Marian Edelman, president of the Childrens Defense Fund, stating that the taxpayer subsidizes every meal consumed in the private dining room of Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger to the time of $12.06. Granted, if the secretary and his guests were required to pay the full cost of the meals they consumed, the yearly saving would amount to a few thousand dollars only, but the chances are, Cap Weinberger isn't the only one whose meal ticket is paid by the taxpayer. # The Haig Leaks: Habit Doesn't Excuse Them

By Robert J. McCloskey

WASHINGTON — I come out somewhere across the field from most critics of the "Unvarnished Haig Story." I participated for more than 12 years in the kind of meetings that were reported in Bob Woodward's Washington Post piece last month. At those meetings — with secretaries Dean Rusk, William Rogers and Henry Kissinger — there were serious policy dis-cussions, some free-for-all, irreverent comments and a fair amount of hot air.

There was a lot of note-taking, which is the blood that pumps through the institution. To be sure, there were leaks. Never, though, do I recall assembled notes of those meetings being handed to the press.

All sorts of government documents have been and - count on it - will continue to be given surreptitiously to the press. Its be-coming a habit doesn't make it less dishon-I make an important distinction between a profile piece on Secretary Haig. The notes were offered on condition that the source remain anonymous and with the full realization that they would form the basis of a published story. Whether the source's motive was benign or mischievous is unclear. This is important because, if it was known, the reporter had an obligation to share it with the reader.

Some critics said they saw no news value in the article. It may be lean with news of policy, but it is not without other news: that the atmosphere in Egypt is "180 de-grees" different since Mr. Sadat's death; that once Israel returns the remainder of the Sinai to Egypt in April, Egypt "will go back to the Arab world, with the United States isolated as Israel's sole defender." Nor is it insignificant to hear Mr. Haig say about Poland last May: "Dust off the Polish contingency with an eye to linkage with Lebanon. The U.S.S.R. might manufacture a Lebanon crisis to cover a Polish move." There is, however, a dollop of "penny dreadful," as one writer said. No one is enlightened by talk of old contretemps with the White House staff. And the piece would have demonstrated better taste if the epithet about British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington — "a duplications bastard"

Later this year, he is likely to be the first World Bank president to go to an annual meeting and be required to report that in the years ahead there will be a sharp decline, in real terms, in the aid to be offered by the International Development Association, the bank's soft-loan affiliate.

The Reagan administration has always been suspicious of the World Bank and the other multilateral lending institutions. Its major spokesman on these issues, Treasury Undersecretary Beryl Sprinkel, trotted out the idea that there was a Socialist drift in the bank

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan commissioned a study of how U.S. policy toward such banks might be resolved. Although this tome, just released, finds the World Bank imnocent of any Socialist taint, the administration nonetheless is planning to cut its funding of subsidized multilateral aid by 30 to 45 percent in real terms. Since U.S. cuts will trigger reductions by other rich nations (unless the IDA succeeds in a heroic effort to get others to increase their shares), only desperately poor countries will get subsidized loan money.

The United States is also pushing the bank to "graduate" into the commercial world nations with more than a $2,180 per-capita income. Bank officials take $2,600 as the right break-point. But more basically, they don't see "graduation" as a money-saving formula: They don't want to sever the umbilical cord too early. Clausen has said that a pennypinching U.S. policy will be "a heavy blow." In a recent speech to foreign diplomats, he said that "if the poorest nations are to become stronger participants in global economics, then they must have adequate resources available to them."

Privately, Clausen is upset be-cause Sprinkel has implied in a patronizing way that the World Bank is coming around to the U.S. view that the role of the multilateral development banks should be circumscribed. It is true that Clausen, a private banker for 31 years, sees a major role for private companies in raising their Third World investments. But he resents the drive to use the bank to carry out U.S. foreign policy. (The Treasury report is almost embarrassingly plain about the linkage between U.S. strategic ob-jectives and the way it hands out foreign aid.) Major European governments, also important "owners" of the bank, are equally distressed by the Reagan administration's narrow-minded approach.

On Jan. 12, the United States opposed a $16-million World Bank loan to Nicaragua for a project to prevent flood damage to transportation systems in 26 low-income areas. A U.S. representative at the bank's executive board meeting It is painfully clear that the said the United States was op-

What is equally interesting, and perhaps more revealing as evidence of the somewhat contemptuous attitude of the United States toward the World Bank, is that a year has gone by and the Reagan administration has yet to name an executive director for the bank. That doesn't seem to be a top Reagan priority.

Press Account of Moro's Final Moments Says He Believed He Would Be Released

ROME - Aldo Moro climbed calmly into the trunk of a car, believing he was about to be freed, according to accounts of the last moments before he was murdered by Red Brigades kid-nappers in May, 1978. Mr. Moro, the former Italian premier, asked the man guarding him. Prospero Gallinari, to say goodbye to the man who had interrogated him, Mario Moretti, according to an account published Saturday by Milan's Corriere della Sera.

Minutes later, Mr. Moro was dead, shot by Mr. Gallinari in the soundproof garage of the ele-gant apartment building where he had been held captive, the Corriere della Sera's report was based on depositions to prosecutors made by Antonio Savasta and Patricio Peci, two accused Red Brigades members. The two told officials that as soon as Mr. Moro got into the car, he was covered with a blanket and then shot in the heart by Mr. Gallinari, according to the newspaper.

The trial of Mr. Gallinari, Mr. Moretti, Miss Braghetti and others allegedly involved in the kidnapping and murder of Mr. Moro is to open April 14 in Rome. Mr. Savasta and 15 other alleged terrorists go on trial Monday in Verona for the kidnapping of U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier, who was freed on Jan. 28 after being held for 42 days. Mr. Peci was arrested in February, 1980, and later became a police informer.

Boeing Tells U.S. Crash Inquiry 3 Other 737s Had Takeoff Problem

By Richard Witkin . New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The National Transportation Safety Board has disclosed three incidents since December in which Boeing 737 air-liners had to make abnormal maneuvers while taking off in iceproducing conditions like those that evidently contributed to the crash of an Air Florida jetliner All three incidents, revealed Saturday, involved Lufthansa flights in Europe, and one occurred the same day as the Air Florida crash. The twin-jet Air Florida craft, taking off in a snowstorm from Washington National Airport, hit a bridge and plunged into the Poto-mac River, killing 78 persons.

The three new reports brought to 24 the number of cases since 1971 in which Boeing 737s may have encountered a dangerous phenomenon that Boeing tests have shown to be related to accumulations of ice or snow, especially on the leading edge of the wings. When this happens, a plane taking off will suddenly encounter forces that can lift its nose abruptly or cause it to roll to one side, or both.

In all three incidents, the crews were able to regain normal control, and there apparently were no inju-

These actions emphasize the need to make certain, through deicing procedures and inspections, that planes have been cleared of ice and snow when taking off. In addition, crews are advised to avoid lifting the plane's nose too abruptly and to add some extra takeoff speed.

Boeing cautioned that information on all but one of the incidents, which involved a test plane of its own, was being put out as reported to Boeing. The company itself has not verified the data. ### UN Says Poverty, Unemployment Continue to Trouble South Asia

BANGKOK — Poverty, unem-ployment and chronic trade deficits continue to trouble the countries of South Asia, according to a United Nations survey released Sunday.

The report, prepared by the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, said starvation in some areas could be avoided only by large imports of food. It also said the gap between rich and poor was continuing to widen in most Southeast Asian countries.

Economic conditions improved in the Communist countries of Indochina, but the report said they still needed huge amounts of food aid from abroad.

COLUMBUS, Ohio — U.S. college students, long a reflection of the country's affluence and achievement, face a financial squeeze that is channeling them in a narrow, career-oriented direction and profoundly altering university

"Adolescence has been an American luxury, but we can't afford it anymore," said Paula Schimpf, a junior at Ohio State

'It's an awful thing that students more and more have to weigh the cost of every little thing rather than think, Is this something I want to study or to do?" " she added. "That's not what universities are for."

Reagan's Proposed Cuts

Miss Schimpf, whose father is a butcher in an A&P store in Lima. Ohio, is in many ways typical of the 12.3 million undergraduate and graduate students on campuses today. Worried about the job market, she has switched her major from teaching to public relations. She is paying for college with a precarious combination of part-time jobs and federally financed grants and low-interest

Now Miss Schimpf, the first member of her family to go to college, is concerned that further cuts in government aid to education, which President Reagan has pro-posed but which will not go into effect unless approved by Congress, may make it impossible for her to finish school.

She was one of several hundred students, teachers and administrators interviewed in the last two weeks at two dozen colleges and universities. Among trends evident from the interviews were these:

· A dramatic shift from traditional liberal arts courses to programs in engineering, business and law likely to enable the students to earn more money. At Ohio State, for instance, enrollment in the colleges of Business and Engineering while the number in the College of Arts and Sciences has dropped 33

• A sharp decline in the number and quality of students going to graduate school in the arts and nces, those who will be the future U.S. college professors. At Harvard, the percentage of seniors who graduated with highest honors and went on to graduate schools other than professional ones shrank from 77 percent in 1964 to percent last year. The number furst-year students at Harvard's Graduate School of Arts and Sciences has slipped 26 percent in the past 10 years and has slipped 39 percent counting only students in the humanities. A growing number of students who must work to meet costs. Three-quarters of the 27,000 students at the University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee have jobs. Moreover, many students find it necessary to take a semester or a year off to work, and as a result many fewer students graduate in Stresses caused by the need to work and study at the same time. This financial pressure has forced many students to give up such pleasures as movies and football games: fewer seem to have cars. ome students report that they do not have enough money to eat properly or that they fall asleep in class after working all night.

 A larger number of politically conservative students. A survey done for the American Council on Education by researchers from the University of California at Los Angeles found that 24 percent of freshmen last fall considered themselves conservatives, compared with 15 percent in 1971. The proportion calling themselves liberals dropped from 37 percent a decade earlier to 18 percent. In that survey, conducted at 368 colleges and universities, 67 percent of this year's freshmen said "to make more money" was an important reason for going to college. At Dillard University, a private plack college in New Orleans, Eric Nance, a freshman, said his chief consideration in majoring in business administration was salary. He said he had been interested in making money "ever since I learned the value of money" and realized that "money was necessary to live the lifestyle I want to

Starting Salaries

The calculations behind this thinking are clear. A study of 161 colleges and universities by the College Placement Council, an organization of directors of job-placement offices, found this winter that starting salaries for gradu-ating seniors varied from $30,108 a year for petroleum engineers and $18,192 for accountants to $14,052 for humanities majors.

The survey reported that, while placement offices were notified of 1,445 job offers for accountants, there were only 87 openings for humanities students.

Perhaps the most characteristic change on campus has been the development of job placement and career guidance offices on cam-puses. At Ohio State's business school, demand for job-finding aid became so great that the school had to use a computer system last fall to restrict the number of interviews a student might have.

"It got so that we had students lining up at 4 a.m. outside in the middle of the winter, just to get their names on the sign-up sheet for companies like IBM," said Betty Tom, assistant director of career inseling in the business school.

Ayn Rand, Philosopher, Dies at 77; Espoused 'Rational Selfishness'

By Wolfgang Saxon New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Ayn Rand, 77, the writer and philosopher of "objectivism" who espoused "rational selfishness" and unfettered capitalism, died Saturday at her home

Miss Rand, whose first name rhymed with pine, was best known for her novels "The Fountainhead" of 1943, for which she also wrote the screenplay when it was turned into a movie with Gary Cooper and Patricia Neal, and "Atlas Shrugged," published in

But from the 1960s on, she increasingly devoted her writing to expound her views more directly in such books as "The Virtue of Selfishness" (1965) and "Capitalism: The Unknown Ideal" (1966).

She also was editor of The Objectivist, a monthly journal of ide-as, from 1962 to 1971 and wrote The Ayn Rand Letter from 1971 to was the belief in the morality and desirability of complete laissezfaire capitalism and what she called "rational selfishness."

The concept of "rational selfishness" ran counter to "altruism," considered a virtue by many. Miss Rand despised it as personal weakness and held it responsible for much of the world's dishonesty and misery. She explained: "My philosophy, in essence, is the concept of man as a heroic being, with his own happiness as the moral purpose of his with productive achievement as his noblest activity, and reason as his only absolute.

It was during the 1970s that Miss Rand, with lectures across the country, attracted the attention of a new generation of students who believed in unrestrained freedom and made her something of a cult figure in libertarian circles.

'Hippies-of-the-Right'

Miss Rand herself spurned the libertarians as a "random collection of emotional hippies-of-theright who seek to play at politics without philosophy."

She proclaimed herself as a supporter of President Gerald R. Ford because, she wrote, he was "the most honest defender of free en-terprise." Miss Rand declared that she was "profoundly opposed" to Ronald Reagan and his presiden-tial ambitions. "Since he denies the right to abortion, he cannot be a defender of any rights," she wrote.

Born Feb. 2, 1905, in St. Petersburg, now Leningrad, into a prosperous Jewish mercantile family, she was graduated from the University of Leningrad in 1924, two years before she came to the Unit-ed States and beaded for Hollywood to work as a movie extra and iunior screenwriter.

She also worked without pay in 1937 as a typist for Eli Kahn, an architect, in order to do the research for her novel, "The Fountainhead." The story was that of an architect, later portrayed by Gary Cooper, who dynamited a building he had designed when he found that its design had been adulterated by others. From 1951 until her death, she worked full-time as a writer and "Philosophy: Who Needs It," is to be published in November.

Pemex Deal Caught In Mideast Politics

By Carl Gewirtz International Herald Tribune PARIS - The Euromarket's usual preoccupation with which bank is doing how big a loan for whom was supplanted last week with a fascination about the politics of which banks are doing what to whom in the $2-billion jumbo loan

As reported last week, Arab banks led by Arab Banking Corp. - which had been appointed re-gional coordinator for the deal withdrew from the operation in a huff over the syndication strategy adopted by lead coordinator Citi-

It now emerges that what the Arabs objected to was not so much the widening of the lead manage-ment group to 29 banks from the intended 20, but the fact that four Israeli banks were invited to join the loan. A report that they also objected to the invitation to the just nationalized Banque Rothschild of France "is just a red herr-ing," said a senior official at one of the Arab banks, "it was just the four Israeli banks."

The boycott of what Arab institutions define as "Zionist" institutions first became an issue in the mid-1970s. There was a considerable stir in the Eurobond market then as some European banks caved in to demands that blacklisted banks be excluded from issues in which Arab banks participated.

Skillful Diplomacy

Thanks to skillful private diplomacy, an understanding was subsequently achieved whereby Arab and blacklisted banks would not sit together as co-managers of an issue but would disregard who chose to join the issue as just underwriters.

Now, suddenly, this modus vivendi is becoming undone. According to the Arab banks, the Israeli banks were not being asked to join the Pemex issue as managers. who are asked to underwrite $69 million each, but as participants taking much smaller amounts.

What mystifies the market, however, is the fact that at latest count not a single Israeli bank has joined the Pemex loan,

Israel does a considerable amount of trade with Mexico and buys its oil there, so inviting them to join the jumbo loan is logical. Crédit Lyonnais of France, the European coordinator of the loan, would not confirm the Israelis had been invited, saying only that, given the size of the loan, invitations debt. Helping to finance Mexico's had been sent to all potential lenders. Efforts to confirm receipt of the invitation with Israeli banks were unsuccessful. According to the Arabs, the Israelis were invited so as to "embarrass" the Arabs. They offer no elaboration, but presumably this

Arabs Blacklist Bank in Brussels

International Herald Tribuna PARIS — The boycott of banks blacklisted by the Arabs is also becoming an issue in the Eurobond market.

Banque Bruxelles Lambert reports that it was advised in De-cember that it had been added to the blacklist for reasons that were not explained and which remain, for the Brussels-based bank, un-clear despite its efforts to find out

Nevertheless, it maintains that it has been excluded from about 10 Eurobond issues floated since then. In some cases, Bruxelles Lambert was simply not invited to participate in deals for clients with whom it had previously done business. And in some cases it was asked to withdraw from the syndicate to make room for an Arab institution at the management or underwriting level.

Officials of Bruxelles Lambert noted they had been excluded from the recent issue for Honda, saying they were told by lead manager Nomura Securities that "We're sorry, but we can't put you in.' It had happened in two or three other issues for Japanese bor-

Bruxelles Lambert also believes it has been excluded from certain "big issues made by the French. I have the feeling that the French Treasury prefers to see Arab banks in the large issues like the recent ones for Banque Française du Commerce Exterieur, Crédit National, Société Générale ... They are all Arab syndicates because of global political reasons," a senior Bruxelles Lambert official said.

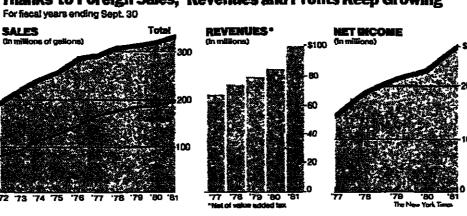

'We haven't been formally excluded," he went on. "We were told. This time it's not for you, it's for another bank and next time you'll be invited in.' So it's not a perfect certitude. I suspect that, in spite of all the explanations 1 got, the true reason is the boycott."

means either with Mexico (by "forcing" the Arabs to abandon the operation) or with the international community (by helping to push the boycott into the news

The view in Europe is much different. Some bankers suggest that the Arabs had second thoughts about lending money to Pemex, which is not a member of OPEC and which needs to pump out every barrel of oil it can to finance the state oil monopoly, the view goes, time when oil prices are plummet-

China Taps Danish Brewer's Skill

By Frank J. Prial

COPENHAGEN - Danes drink a lot of beer about 32 gallons a year per capita. The Chinese drink very little beer - less than a gallon a year. So the Danish company that owns the Carlsberg and Tuborg labels did some simple arithmetic. It came to an intoxicating conclusion, and in January, the company wrote a contract that could prove the coup of the decade in the beer business.

United Breweries Group, Europe's second-biggest brewer, signed an open-ended agreement to help China quadruple its beer production over the

Based parity on rumors about the China break-through, United Breweries' closely held stock more than doubled in value last year on the Copenhagen exchange

Another impetus may have been the news, also sclosed in January, that Carlsberg scientists had made an important breakthrough in the exploitation of yeast-based enzymes. ### Rift Hinders U.S. Firms in Fight Against New EEC Business Rules

By Thomas W. Lippman Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Sweeping easures being drafted to regulate the management and operations of multinational corporations in the European Economic Community have aroused deep concern among the biggest blue-chip corporations in the United States, but a tactical split in their own ranks may undermine the U.S. efforts to defeat or tone down the proposed rules.

The regulations, which are in various stages of the EEC's complex legislative process and are part of a long-term effort to har-monize the business laws of the EEC's 10 member states, would require multinational corporations to consolidate the financial reports of all their European operations and disclose exhaustive data on their plans and strategies. They would increase corporate liability for defective products, and give workers a major voice in management decision-making. The most controversial is known as the "Vredeling proposal," after is self-defeating for the Arabs at a Dutch Socialist Henk Vredeling who first proposed it in 1980 when

Approval Seen Likely

A key committee of the Europe-an Parliament is scheduled to con-clude its debate on the Vredeling proposal later this month. Diplomats and business executives in the United States and Europe say it is likely to be approved. The question is whether the parliament will propose amendments to make it more palatable to business before returning it to the EEC Commission for implementation.

Key OPEC Nations Propose Coordinated Cuts in Output

By Thomas Thomson

DOHA, Qatar - OPEC has decided to try to coordinate cuts in its oil production to defend current prices in a long-awaited re-sponse to the world oil glut, which it expects will ease in two or three

Key oil ministers struck an informal deal on production in talks here over the weekend after Saudi Arabia, the biggest exporter, said late Friday that it was cutting its own output ceiling from 8.5. million to 7.5 million barrels daily.

Ministers of nine of the 13 mem-bers of the Organization of Petro-leum Exporting Countries then worked out the essentials of an ac-cord, to be clinched at an emergency OPEC conference that they scheduled for March 19 in Vienna.

The Iraqi minister, Tayeh Abdul-Karim, told reporters Sunday that the ministers took the new Saudi production figure, then considered output cuts offered by others, and were able to fix a new ceiling for total OPEC output of 18.5 million barrels a day — down from about 20 million now.

The ministers, including Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani of Saudi Arabia, said the OPEC benchmark price of $34 for a barrel of Saudi light crude would not be changed until at least the end of the year.

Sheikh Yamani also insisted bere that Saudi Arabia produced around its ceiling of 8.5 million barrels daily in January and February, though industry sources have said that Saudi output had fallen to almost seven million barrels daily in February.

In London, however, Western oil industry executives said that defending prices might depend on whether OPEC has been able to match the new production figures to demand, and whether the organization could fairly carve up its dwindled market among all 13 members in the formal bargaining corded since the 1960s. It warned that if the rush by exporters hardest hit by buyer defec-tions to offer secret discounts con-

Mr. Abdul-Karim was optimistic on Sunday that OPEC could stop world oil prices from going

Westphalia and will last just 11 months to bring the expiration date of the contract in line with the

into a tailspin. He blamed the glut on a run down by the oil companies of their surplus stocks, at a rate of four million barrels daily, and said he expected pressure on OPEC would ease in two to three

But the International Energy Agency, however, says it suspects the flow from stocks is much smaller than OPEC estimates.

One oil company spokesman said he considered a ceiling of 18.5 million barrels daily "a good bet" for OPEC, but he added: "We shall have to see whether economic activity will pick up."

Mr. Abdul-Karim said output could be cut again if necessary.

The Algerian minister, Belkacem Nabi, said the Vienna meeting would decide in detail on the sharing between members with output cuts being made according to their respective financial capabilities.

have the capacity to reduce a lot more than others," he said. "What we want is that the reduction be fairly shared." Mr. Nabi said he was not sure the level of 18.5 million barrels daily would "have all the effects members of OPEC are expecting."

OPEC will hold a regular meeting in Quito, Eruador, on May 20 when it could reassess the market reaction, he said. According to Petroleum Intelligence Weekly, a New York oil newsletter, only Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar and

Kuwait among the 13 OPEC members have not been forced by falling oil sales to run budget deficits. Saudi Arabia's new ceiling of 7.5 million barrels daily remains above the 6.2 million that Sheikh Yamani has said it must produce to meet financial needs.

W. German Union Wins 4.2% Raise in Key Pact

KREFELD, West Germany -Union and management have agreed on a 4.2-percent wage increase for over a million metal workers in a settlement that should set the trend for four million other workers in West Germany's car, electrical and mechanical engineering industries.

The compromise, reached Saturday and backdated to Feb. 1, for metal workers in North Rhine-Westphalia, the industrial heart-land of West Germany, amounts to a wage cut in real terms because inflation is running close to six percent. Last year's pay rise was 4.9 percent.

The two sides unanimously agreed to recommend the settle-ment for the country's 3.7 million metal workers.

Within hours, union and man-agement in West Berlin said they would adopt the 4.2-percent settlement for the city's 95,000 metal workers. And union and management in Bavaria on Saturday adopted a similar 4.2-percent set-tlement for their 700,000 metalworkers. The Bavarian agreement begins one month later than that of their colleagues in North Rhineother contracts next year, a Bayarian employers spokesman said. The I.G. Metall union originally demanded a 7.5-percent rise while management offered only three percent in nationwide negotiations, which broke down last Thousands of metal-workers staged token "warning" strikes in various parts of the country last week while arbitration was in progress in Krefeld. Employers leader Paul Pleiger said the contract was too costly for many firms and would cause serious problems in view of the difficult economic and employment situation. There are nearly two mil-lion persons out of work in West

Wolfram Thiele, national metal industry employers leader, said a lower settlement would have been better for reducing unemployment.

But Mr. Pleiger, president of the North Rhine-Westphalia Metal Industry Employers Association, said the compromise would not block the way to boosting the market and securing jobs.

Union leader Kariheinz Bräuer said price developments this year would show if the pay raise was right. It was up to employers to make the settlement work by holding prices down, said the Cologne area I.G. Metall leader.

By Carl Gewirtz

onal Herald Tribune PARIS — If ever there were a week for a rally in the Eurobond market, this week looks like being

Demand for bonds was apparent all last week, with prices on the secondary market rising despite the absence of any decline in short-term rates, and new issues were well received - including the maiden $400-million Eurobond offering by American Telephone & Telegraph bearing a startlingly low 1414 percent coupon for seven years.

"It was a mildly bullish week," one trader commented, "with nobody quite believing it was justified but with everybody feeling obliged to participate lest they miss the boat."

And they were right. Late Friday, the Federal Reserve reported the U.S. money supply dropped $3 billion — a figure that was at the maximum end of what analysts had been forecasting. The reaction in the New York credit market was immediate: the price of Treasury securities jumped a full point while the cost of overnight money dropped to 13% percent from the 14½ percent opening level.

April Blues

Analysts now expect the money supply to decline through the end of this month. They worry about April, however, which year after year has pattern of strong growth in the M-1 measure of money supply. But that is a month away and for now analysts are anticipating a rally in bond prices based on signs that the U.S. economy continues to weaken and that therefore the Fed will have reason to relax its tight money policy.

The only drawback to a burgeoning calendar of new issues this week, bankers reported, is a reluctance by borrowers to jump into the market. Many borrowers prefer to wait in the belief that interest rates will drop even lower in coming weeks and that new issues could be floated more cheaply than at today's levels.

U.S. 'All Savers' Far Short of Goal

By Nancy L. Ross

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, declaring "It has not served the purpose it was designed to do, so there is no need to continue it." has sounded the death knell for the All Savers Certificate.

The All Sovers Act was passed by Congress at the behest of the savings industry over the objections of the Reagan administration. Industry lobbyists persuaded legislators that the bill would pump sorely needed funds into ailing savings and loans and mutual savings banks. When commercial banks grumbled, they were added to the list of eligible sellers. And the housing industry was won over by a provision that 75 percent of net new funds would be earmarked for the residential sector. Agricul-tural loans were also included for political reasons. Individuals who buy these certificates are allowed to exclude $1,000 in interest payments from their income taxes; couples filing jointly may exclude $2,000. The program, which began Oct. 1, 1981, runs until Dec. 31 of this year, but a bill has been introduced in Congress to extend it.

The U.S. League of Savings Associations optimistically predicted sales of All Savers Certificates would reach $230 billion in 15 months. The Treasury estimated $120 billion, whereas the Joint Taxation Committee settled on $65 billion. The National Associa-finance construction of 400,000 to 450,000 new houses during fiscal 1982 and 1983, a 40-percent increase. Moreover, an additional five million households would be able to qualify for mortgages, thanks to lower interest rates made possible because financial institutions pay only 70 percent of the annual average investment yield on the certificates.

Sales during the first month reached $35 billion, but tapered off rapidly. By the end of January the Federal Reserve put the com-bined total sold by banks and thrift institutions at $45.4 billion. Reasons for the slowdown in sales include a decline in the interest rate paid on All Savers, competition from Individual Retirement Accounts, lack of a clear tax advantage to the middle income saver, and generally poor economic conditions. Moreover, the proections made by Data Resources Inc. for the construction industry were based on what proved to be an erroneously low interest rate of 13 percent

That $45.4 billion total breaks down as follows: commercial banks, $19.7 billion; savings and loans, $20.9 billion; and mutual savings banks, $4.8 billion. For every new dollar customers put in, they simply moved three or four dollars from existing accounts at tional Association of Realtors pre-dicted that sales would help to go to housing (and agricultural to go to housing (and agricultural loans) must come from net new funds, one has to calculate how much money was withdrawn from other accounts at the time of All Savers purchases.

Banks generally took in more deposits than they lost in the period between Oct. 1 and Dec. 31, 1981, but thrift institutions sufterrible hemorrhages. (The law states that the 75 percent be calculated on the basis of interest credited to the accounts, so the figures are higher than would be expected if only net new funds were counted.) The banks' share of All Savers money for housing during the first three months of the program amounted to $8.1 billion; $5.6 billion for the savings and loans; and about $1 billion for the savings banks for a total of $14.7

The law allows the money to be invested in conventional or government-insured mortgages, home improvement loans, rehabilitation, cooperative apartments and mobile homes as well as securities issued by secondary market agents such as the Federal National Mortgage Association. There is no breakdown on how the funds are being allotted. All Savers' sales allowed thrift institutions to quell the outflow of deposits for one month before the run began again. During the fourth quarter, S&Ls made $10 billion in mortgage loans, of which All the same institutions into All Savers funds may have been a Savers. But since the law specifies part. Any effect All Savers might have had on profits is buried in a sea of red ink; thrifts lost $6.5 billion last year. As for the effect on the housing market, again experts find none discernible. Construction and resales are both stymied by high interest rates. "It is hard to see a measurable effect," said Bob Sheehan, an economist with the National Association of Home

Yet Mr. Sheehan would support an extension of All Savers under certain conditions: more direct benefit to mortgages, more choices of maturities for savers, and at 85 percent rather than 70 percent of the Treasury bill yield.

Bill to Revoke Shares Raises Investor Concern in Canada

By Irvin Lutsky Washington Post Service

TORONTO - Securities industry analysts are concerned a recent development in Canada's National Energy Program will probably lead to renewed friction between the United States and Canada and could cause foreign investors to dump Canadian oil and gas stocks.

Federal Energy Minister Marc Lalonde last month unveiled an omnibus Energy Security Act which, among many other pro-posed changes, could enable Canadian companies to drive out for-eign shareholders.

The act contains amendments to many other pieces of federal legislation but the analysis are concerned about proposed changes in

What the act would do is to enable companies, dependent on a high degree of Canadian owner-ship as a requirement for govern-ment grants, royalties, licenses, and permits to reduce foreign shareholdings by cancelling exist-ing issued shares ing issued shares.

This could happen only if the foreign investor refused to sell. In such circumstances, the company could cancel the shares, reissue them as "constrained" shares and resell them to Canadians. The foreign shareholder would then receive the proceeds of the sale. Companies would be able to issue both free and constrained shares and would be entitled to buy back shares and reissue an equivalent number of shares which could be held by Canadians only. Foreign investors dissatisfied with their treatment could file notices of dissent and receive "fair value," based on independent appraisal of the company's assets. There is no indication of how many, if any, companies would resort to the proposed forced Canadianization, but analysts here fear the proposed legislation will be seen as another example of "foreigners not welcome."

Canadian oil and gas companies have been among the most active issues on the American Stock Ex change in New York. While they accounted for a high proportion of total Amex trading in 1981, analysts say activity in the Canadian oils has fallen by half in New York. They fear that the Energy Security Act could result in a fur-ther steep decline in interest in Canadian energy securities among

They also fear that Canadian oil and gas shares will decline if com-panies use their own funds to buy back stock, reissue it in restricted form, and attempt to resell the shares to the smaller Canadian

U.S. Firms Split in Fight Over EEC Proposals

the ball for Mr. Fisher in the Senate, said when he introduced his bill last August that the Europeans are ingrates who failed to recognize the benefits to "the econom health of Europe" from the activities of U.S. firms.

Neither Sen. Symms' bill nor its counterpart in the House has made any legislative headway. Sources in Congress acknowledge that the purpose of introducing the socalled "blocking legislation" was more to fire a shot across the bow of the Europeans than to enact en-

The State Department has been caught in the middle. The department disapproves of what the Europeans propose to do, but it also wants to avoid a confrontation with the EEC at a time when irritants to U.S.-European relations are proliferating.

A senior State Department official said last week that the U.S. hopes the U.S. corporations, and some in Europe that share their concerns, can do their own negotiating with the EEC and avoid es-

Mr. Fisher, a partner in the firm of Patton, Boggs and Blow, represents Mars Inc., the secretive candy and rice empire based in McLean, Va., and about 20 other multinationals" that he declined to name because "a lot of them have investments in Europe which are hostages to the governments over there," he said.

He acknowledged that his tactics — which go so far as to suggest that U.S. defense commitments to NATO might diminish if the Europeans undercut U.S. economic inwithin the EEC.

Reverse Effect

But, he argued, "publicity is our best weapon, because what they are doing is illegal. It is outside the scope of the Treaty of Rome," which created the EEC, he said, and since it is illegal "you can understand why the Eurocrats don't want to read it in the newspapers."

Such free-swinging verbal assaults, in the opinion of some opponents of the proposed regula-tions, have the effect of reinforcing tween the U.S. government and the determination of the regulations' supporters to push them through. Because he represents Mars, which holds its corporate information as closely as possible and has a reputation as anti-union, Mr. Fisher is viewed by critics in Europe as a well-financed pleader whose tactics jeopardize the interests of other U.S. businesses.

> Ivor Richard, the British Laborite who as the EEC's commissioner for Social Affairs is the key figure on the European side, said recently that "the Fisher group's tactics are totally counterproductive. The person they have to influence is me, and they have not had a scrap of infinence on me, nor will they. We are legislating for Europe, not for the United States."

A London newsletter. The Inside Line, observed that "Europeans are baffled by the hysteria in America" over the Vredeling proposals. "Progressive politicians in Europe have been talking for dec-ades about the democratization of management decision making ... much attention has been locused in America on proposals which passed in their present form."

Mr. Fisher is skeptical of such assurances. While U.S. executives who profess to understand Eu-rope's way of doing things and rely on a low-key approach are pursuing their gentlemanly negotiations, he argues, regulations that will damage their businesses are making their way toward adoption.

So he scrapped the traditional approach in dealing with the Euro-peans and launched a well-financed, highly visible campaign in the grand Washington manner, ete with blunt lectures telling the Europeans their own self-interest is at stake.

"I admit my style is unusual," he said, "but I grabbed their atten-

He so irritated the Europeans, and other representatives of U.S. business, at a meeting in Brussels last July that he and his law firm were dropped from the National Foreign Trade Council.

Then in October Mr. Fisher told the newspaper Le Monde that "the American firms, who control half the industrial capital of the European Community, some $80 bil-lion, are not without means of applying pressure" — just the sort of comment that arouses the resentment of Europe's leftist trade who are pressing for enactment of the corporate controls.

Le Monde named several of the corporate giants that have opposed the regulations — International Harvester, Union Carbide, Gener-al Motors, Ford, Kodak, IBM and others - and implied that Mr. Fisher represented them. That provoked outrage in the boardrooms of the corporations, according to several sources here and in Europe, and led them to openly repudiate Mr. Fisher and his tactics. Mr. Fisher says he was "misquoted" by Le Monde.

And competition overseas is heating up. "A big factor in that market is going to be Anheuser Busch," said Emanuel Goldman, an analyst with Sanford C. Ber-stein & Co. "They are test market-ing in France, Sweden, Germany. even Japan, and when they get rolling they could make a real impact in overseas markets."

But most people in beer rate United Breweries highly for quality and innovation, as well as salemanship.

Two years ago a subsidiary, Danbrew Consult Ltd. was set up, which brings together some 30 Carlsberg and Tuborg specialists in a consulting appropriate that in a consulting organization that can, its officers claim, do anything from correcting the taste of a client's beer to eliminating the carshattering noise in a bottling room to producing a complete, turnkey

Politics Snares Pemex Loan

the largest supplier of oil to Israel. Mexico has restricted oil sales to not more than 20 percent of any one country's total needs, a move seen as yielding to Arab pressure. But in the current market, that limit is observed more in the breach than in the practice, analysts say.

Not surprisingly, amid the un-certainty about what is going on and why, all kinds of rumors get started. A completely different view heard in the market, is that the Arabs may have pulled out to years. Interest will be set at % do their own deal with Pemex at point over Libor and lenders will different, more generous terms be paid an extension fee of % perthan the % point over the London interbank rate offered on the publicly syndicated loan. This is denied by Angel Gurria, director of external finance at Mexico's finance ministry. Approval for a foreign loan would have to pass through his office, he said in a tele-phone interview, and "I know nothing about it."

Financing Role Grows

Mr. Garria also rejects the view that petrodollars are abandoning Mexico. "We have increasingly im-

Elsewhere. Arab Banking Corp. and Arab-Latin American Bank are putting together a $300-million standby for the central bank of Peru. The maturity is 3½ years and interest is set at % point over Li-bor, sweetened with a quarter-percent facility fee and front-end fees.

Loan for Venezuela Venezuela's Industrial Bank is seeking $200 million for three years. Lenders have the option to extend the loan for a further two

As expected, Segba, the Buenos Aires electricity utility awarded its $200-million loan to a group led by National Westminster and ABC. Interest is set at 11/2 point over Libor for the first four years and 14 for the final four years. Interest on prime-based loans will be 1/2 point lower. The grace period is three years and the front-end fee is 1% percent, up % point from the previous Argentine loan by YPF.

In Australia, Vamgas is borrowing $150 million. Half will be done portant relations with the Arab banking world," he said, adding that "they are playing a bigger role in the proportion of [Mexico's] overall financing."

Meanwhile, the Euromarket is the set of the proportion o

Perry Is Signed To 'Make-Good' Pact by Mariners

The Associated Press TEMPE, Ariz — Pitcher Gay-lord Perry has been signed to a "make-good" free-agent contract by the Seattle Mariners. Perry, who has a 297-239 record lifetime, came to terms with the Mariners on Friday and threw 15 minutes of batting practice Satur-

Perry was released by the Atlan-ta Braves after going 8-9 in 23 games with a 3.93 earned-run average last season. "The arm feels good and I feel great," he said. "Everybody talks about my age. I'm 43 and proud of it. I know I can win a lot of ballgames here."

Mariner President Dan O'Brien said Perry is competing with 23 other pitchers for 10 spots on the roster and, if successful, could earn a maximum of $180,000 for the season under an escalating salary ossistant athletic director.

WESTERN MICHIGAN Assemble telephonological manufactures of the second sec COLLEGE Hoch, Nicklaus, Stadler Share Lead in U.S. Golf

United Press International
ORLANDO, Fla.—Scott Hoch shot par 71 Saturday to scramble into a tie with Jack Nicklaus and Craig Stadler entering Sunday's double-round finale of the ranplagued Bay Hill golf tournament.
Hoch moved to a 6-under 136 after 36 holes, tying Nicklaus and Stadler, who had finished their second rounds Friday before a violent storm halted play with half of the 150-man field still on the course.
Only the remainder of the second round was played Saturday; the round was played Saturday; the third and fourth rounds were scheduled for Sunday.

Lift Records Reported

The Associated Fress

MOSCOW — Weightlifter Viktor Sots set two world records Saturday in the up-to-100 kilogram (220-pound) division, Tass reported. It said Sots snatched 193 kilograms (424.6 pounds) and jerked 233 kilograms (512.6 pounds) to beat both marks—held by the So-Union's Yuri Zakharevich by .5 kilograms (1.1 pounds).

CONYA WEILER, born in Seattle and named after Sonja Henie, is the daughter of a woman named Valery and a man named Ray. They live in a one-room basement apartment from which Ray exits every morning with his mind bent on finding a fortune. He is a con man, but so sincere in his belief that somewhere in the mountains lies the Grail (gold, uranium, plutonium — the mineral changes as the world changes) that he has something of Lancelot's purity.

For Valery there is no exit, unless naming your children after movie stars and ice-skating queens is an escape, beyond the hope of a "dream house," and Sunday drives to look at possibilities. Sonya hopes for one too, for that and the life of a happy family. Poor, lonely, chain-smoking Valery dies after the birth of her second daughter, Greta, done in by cancer and by Christian Science. Ray is left to raise his children in the only way he knows: by coming. As he tries to con others into lending him money for mining, so he tries to con Sonya, Gre-ta and himself into believing them-selves the "Three Little Weilers," a trio as comfortable and cozy as the Three Little Kittens or Papa, Mama and Baby Bear. Greta is too young to know anything. Ray too self-dehided to face anything, only Sonya is fully aware of the terrible disorder of their Housekeepers, some of them Ray's bedmates and almost all of them deficient in something, usually kindness, come and go. The "dream house" nev-er materializes, except temporarily.

Sonya works her way through college, makes a home for Greta, eventu-ally marries, has children and makes a home for herself. Ray drifts in and out of her life, still dreaming his schemes, dreaming his time. When he dies, she cannot bury him, literally or figuratively: his body isn't found for years. Pathetic, paranoid, dishonest, deluded, Ray haunts Sonya; he also haunts the book.

"Imaginary Crimes" has two voices, Sonya's and a storyteller's, in fluent alternation. The tale they toll is sad but neither voice ever succumbs to. pathos, although they skirt it, perhaps, because they are steeled with humor.

It would be a pity if "Imaginary Crimes" — written by a woman about a woman and bearing the imprimatur of two well-known female writers on its jacket — were herded into that lirerary ghetto called "female fiction." Instead it belongs in that part of the imaginary library which is both-broader in scope and extremely diffi-cult to enter — the one titled "fine

But for the last few pages, in which the author feels impelled to tle up what she seems to see as loose strings and to shout what before she has so beautifully whispered, "Imaginary Crimes" is just about flawless. Sonya finally triumphs over her life, but it is. Ray who walks away with the book. "And now I must be on my way again," the con man writes. "I will be oving you, dear Sonya, every moment I have life; in the lovely midnight hours and in the iridescent spleador of the dawn; in the brilliant light of noon-time and when the evening shadows steal across the valley, and the sun is setting in the purple hills." ONE of the brightest new stars of the game is the Soviet Union's Lev Psachis. So far ranked only as an international master, the 22-year-old Psachis will soon overcome that for-He has shared the formidable Soviet championship two years in succession, becoming the first player in more than a decade to achieve such a feat. In 1980, he tied with Grandmaster Aleksandar Belyavsky and in the recent 1981 competition he tied with Grandmaster Gari Kasparov.

In this one opportunity to compete in an individual event outside the Soviet Union, Psachis took first prize and obtained a grandmaster norm in the Sarajevo International Tournaent in April 1981. Another such triumph will make him a grandmaster in name as well as in play. His main weapon is a command of sharp tactical play beginning with the opening, as one may observe in his victory over Grandmaster Viktor Kupreichik in the 1981 Soviet champion-

It was long thought that 6 N-KR4 in the chief line of the Slav Defense was a joke, that after 6... B-B1, White was obliged to stop 7... P-K4 by 7 N-B3 and thus allow a repetition-of-position draw with 7 . . . B-B4, etc. However, no one is laughing now because the variation has been given new life by the gambit with 7 P-K4, P-K4; 8 RxP!?, PxP; 9 P-K5, PxN; 10 BxPch!, KxB; 11 QxQ, PxP; 12 Q-B7ch, K-K3; 13 QxBch, QN-Q2; 14 QxNP, PxR/Q; 15 QxPch, K-B2; 16 P-K6ch, K-N1; 17 O-O. This gives White proprieting attacking changes as White promising attacking chances, as in the Larsen-Teschner game in Wageningen 1957, which has recently

The idea in Knpreichik's 8 . . . P-K4!? was that 9 PxB?!, PxP; 10 N-R2, NxP yields Black three pawns plus total control of the center for a piece. Psachis was not lured, but aimed, rather, for consolidation with 9 PxP.

rather, for consolidation with 9 PxP, KN-Q2; 10 N-N2.

Psachis's 11 P-B4 threatened to trap the Black QB with 12 P-B5, forcing sharp play with 11 . . . P-KR4; 12 P-K4. After 12 . . . PxP; 13 QxP, N-B4; 14 BxPl, the enticing counterattack with 14 . . . Q-Q57 could have been crushingly rebuffed by a mating attack with 15 B-K3!, QxB; 16 Q-B8ch, K-K2; 17 BxNch, QxB; 18 O-Q-Q! For example, 18 . . . P-B3; 19 O-O!. For example, 18 . . . P-B3; 19 R-Q6!, Q-B5; 20 Q-B7ch, K-K1; 21 R-Q8 mate. Moreover, 14 . . . NxKP?; 15 P-B5, NxN; 16 PxB, N-Q4; 17 PxPch

Position after 23 . . . Q-B2

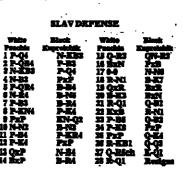

would have powerfully exposed the Black king. An alternative way to re-cover Black's lost pawn — 14 ... BxP; 15 NxB, NxN; 16 B-K3 (but not 16 Q-B5? because of 16 . . . Q-R4ch; 17 K-K2, N-Q3!) — gives White strong attacking chances because of his superior mobility and powerful center. It does not matter at all that White can be prevented from castling by either 16 . . . B-N5ch or 16 . . . Q-R4ch.

It isn't clear why Psachis did not accept the piece sacrifice with 20 KxB. For example 20 . . . Q-Q6ch; 21 K-N1, O-O-O; 22 B-K3, B-B4; 23 Q-R3ch is of no use to Black. Of course, his 20 B-K3 safely maintained his pawn-shead position.

And he soon launched a decisive attack with 24 P-K6! against a mori-bund Black position. Had Kupreichik now tried 24 . . R-Q1, Psachis could have brought about a winning ending with 25 RxRch, QxR; 26 Q-R5, Q-B2; 27 OxPch, and so on. Against the worse 24 . . . PxP; 25 PxP, Q-K4, Psachis marched to victory with 26 R.KB1, Q-Q3; 27 Q-R5ch; K-Q1; 28 R-Q1. About to lose his queen, Kupreichik gave up.

The fine drizzle stopped, leaving a condition known as "slightly greasy." Strange to say, Basque backs would often drop the ball but Scots almost never.

Fullback Andy Irvine, the captain and Scottish national hero kicked a penalty after 2 minutes and 35 seconds. Fullback Marc Sallefranque missed after six minutes. Then Irvine missed three times and Saliefranque once. The French had been told to start cautiously; even so, right wing Serge Blanco might have had a try if Sallefranque had passed to him. The French were holding their own in the lineouts but suffering in the scrums.

It was from a scrum, though, that scrumhalf Gérald Martinez broke in the 37th minute, flipping a backhanded little pass to his captain, Jean-Pierre Rives, who scurried ahead for a try in the middle, short legs pumping and long blond hair in the wind. Sallefranque missed the easy conversion but finally managed a penalty. Halftime score, 7-3 for France. Berezina?

The 10-point victory margin was England's biggest against Wales since 1921. The Welsh have lost nine of their 10 away matches in four years, starting with a 1978 tour to Australia.

Slemen took a pass from scrumhalf Steve Smith after a winning ruck and outran Welsh wing Robert Ackerman to the corner. Carleton replaced Smith when the scrumhalf was trapped in a maul, and instead of passing the ball that his forwards fed to him he ran 40 meters for a solo try.

These three Connecticut Yankees migrate to Florida from Hartford as soon as the ballplayers arrive. In the morning, they play golf. Then they head to the Yankee ballpark here. They come early to catch the bargain days when workouts and calisthenics and drills and rookie B games are free. They've got tickets to nine Yankee spring Long ago, in their playing days, they watched Jim Thorpe when he came through Hartford, playing in the Eastern League. And they spotted that kid from Columbia University who played under a fictitious moniker so he wouldn't lose his amateur status. Sure, they re-

Matter of fact, Red Mazotas played semipro ball against Gehrig one summer. Or at any rate figures he probably did, seeing as how Gehrig was born in 1903 and Red

On each new baseball subject, the brothers' opinions run the gamut, no two exactly agreeing — although not absolutely disagreeing — on anything. It's as if, through all the back-porch discussions during advancing age, they have, by convenience as much as conviction, each staked out a slightly different position, the bet-ter to wile away the hours.

In this sense, they are perhaps typical of any group of lifelong fans. For instance, Red, a flight maintenance chief who was with the Flying Tigers in China in World War II, didn't like the players' position during the strike one bit. He sees all that fresh green money being stuffed into their young pockets and figures it's being taken from his old pocket. "The fans are the suckers," he

He pauses. "Ijust hope it doesn't kill the game."

No Grudge

What's of note is that none of the Mazotas — "and none of those we hang around with," says Red holds any significant grudge against a sport that has given them 60 or 70 good summers to one poor one.

Oddly, these spry codgers even look for the best in Commissioner Bowie Kuhn. "He just gets stuck trying to satisfy everybody," Ted

Like all who care for the game, they'd rather talk the loyalties of the heart than the economics of the wallet.

"There's Yogi Berra," says Red, spotting the Yankee coach. "Gets $50,000 or $60,000 a year to count the baseballs.

"Bill Dickey was better," says Leo. They all nod agreement. Next Chris Chambliss steps to the plate. "Dignified," says Red. "Journeyman," amends Ted.

"A top journeyman," says Leo, getting it precisely right. Next "The Babe was my all-time favorite, an automatic showman, says Ted, who's such a Yankee fan that he says he drinks Ruppert's (whiskey) in honor of roaring '20s

Yankee owner Jake Ruppert. "Never compare to Ruth." "Ted Williams compares to all of them," demurs Leo, giving the perspective of the lifelong sufferng Red Sox fan.

Since Hartford is midway be-tween Boston and New York, the Mazotas are part of that town's historic schizophrenia regarding the Red Sox-Yankee rivalry. As a consequence, Hartford has, for decades, been bombarded with TV broadcasts from both clubs, making it a fans' paradise.

The buffoonish pop-sociology question to ask these gentlemen, with nearly 200 years of bearing witness to baseball among them, would be: Now, after the historic strike of '81, how often will you be in the ballpark '82?

To these brothers, baseball is the whole package: spring at the Yankee camp, minor league ball around Hartford, an occasional pilgrimage to Yankee Stadium or Fenway Park, plus all those radio and TV games. So Red Mazotas the old semipro, the Flying Tiger — has the proper reply.

How often at the park? He answers as he would have any summer since before World War I. "In a sense," he says, "every day,"

The Associated Press SAN ANTONIO, Texas - A sellout crowd at HemisFair arena got its money's worth Saturday night, when it took the San Antonio Spurs three overtimes to register a record-breaking 171-166 National Basketball Association victory over the Milwaukee Bucks. The clubs' total of 337 points broke the NBA record of 316. set in 1962 when Wilt Chamberlain scored 100 points to lead Philadelphia past New York. 169-147, and matched in 1970 when Cincinnati beat San iego, 165-151. The Sp tal came within two points of the old record for most points scored by a team, set in 1959 when Boston scored 173 against Minneapolis.

The winners' George Gervin had a season-high 50 points, offsetting a brilliant 42-point effort by Brian Winters. With Winters bitting his team's final 13 points, Milwaukee ralled from six points down with 2:53 remaining to send the game into overtime at 131-all.

The Bucks took substantial leads in the first two extra periods, only to have the Spurs rally each time. Milwaukee led 145-141 with 36 seconds left in the first and held a 157-153 lead with :51 left in the second, But Mike Mitchell hit a shot at the buzzer to knot the first overtime at 145-145 and Gervin tied the second.

Gervin made eight straight points in the third overtime to stake San Antonio to a 165-161 lead with less than two minutes remaining. The Bucks were unable close the gap.

Fruitful Exchanges

By William Safire

TEW YORK — The foreign minister and the secretary had a fruitful exchange of views," says the Official Spokesman.

The State Department correspondent jots down "fru," and asks, "Would you also characterize their talks as candid?"

A C

"A full and fruitful exchange," says the Spokesman carefully, adding a new adjective, not the one the reporter suggested.

"You would not say 'full and frank" asks another member of journalism's ultracognoscenti.

Saffre The Official Spokesman never overily rejects a word of art, but substitutes one of his own: "Forthcoming," he says finally,

Here is the key to that minuet. In spokesmanspeak, fruitful means: "It went pretty well. They got somewhere." Candid means: They hollered at each other a lot and told each other where to get off." Frank is the diplomat's way of saying: "We did not agree on a thing." Full means: "It went longer than we figured, lunch got cold, the chef is miffed." Full and frank means: "It looks like war." Forthcoming means: "They actually made an offer, and we're thinking about it." Its opposite is unhelpful, which translates as: "Such crude interference could set back the cause of peace for decades.

Those are the old standbys in striped-pants vocabulary, which are sometimes adopted by politicians: When Sen. Edward Kennedy left a meeting with President Carter, who had tried to talk him out of running for the 1980 Democratic nomination, the senator called their meeting "frank but not unfriendly.

Robert McCloskey, a veteran State Department spokesman now a columnist, recalls describing meetings with a French term tour d'horizon — which meant wide-ranging discussion." He used that whenever reporters wanted to zero in on a particular topic, and he wanted to signal that "they talked about a lot of things, not

World War II by Winston Churchill. A Sherpa is a member of a Tibetan people, living on the south-ern slopes of the Himalayas in Nepal, famed for mountain-climbing capabilities; Sherpa Tenzing was famous for participating in the first conquest of Mount Everest. In Sherpa meetings, diplomats prepare the documents for world leaders to sign at summit meetings.

Churchill was also present at the creation of a ringing diplomatic phrase when he said at the Guildhall in London in the opening days of World War I, "The maxim of the British people is: Business as usual." This was a defiant maxim, telling the world that not even war could interrupt the steadfast work of the British people.

In the generation between the wars, however, a curious conversion overtook the phrase. "No business as usual" was a sardonic Depression sign, and the onceproud slogan gained a meaning of smugness and complacency. And so it is today: "The United States has made clear," Secretary of State Haig told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, as he recommended measures to prevent Poland from going into default, "that we will not do business as usual with either Poland or the Soviet Union while repression in Poland

ONDON — They come from L. Charolles, a small town in the hills of central France. As youngsters, they tasted the superb gastronomic specialties of the surrounding region — Charo-lais beef, Beaujolais and Burgundy wines, Bresse chickens, Auvergne cheeses.

So it is not surprising that Albert and Michel Roux decided to become chefs. What is surprising is that they chose to pursue their careers in England, which had previously shown a limited appetite for the best French cooking, and that they succeeded so well that they changed the whole character of the restaurant trade in London

There were good French res-taurants here before the Roux brothers arrived. But they set out to create great ones, and this year they have received their reward - a third star from the Michelin Guide, the first ever awarded by that august French publication to a restaurant in Britain. In the guide's view, that means that Le-Gavroche, the Roux flagship, is as good a restaurant as those of Alain Chapel, Pierre and Jean Troisgros, Michel Guérard and the other French culinary

[AP reported there were no major changes in the new Miche-lin guide for France, which went on sale Friday. There were no new three-star restaurants and none that lost their third star. The new Gavroche, which is on Upper Brook Street in May-fair, a short walk from the U.S. Embassy, has been open for only a few months. But the menu is quite similar to that of the old Ĝavroche, which was in a much less grand corner of Chelsea, and where Albert and Michel Roux refined the styles they had developed as private cooks in France and in England, working in turn for Astors and Rothschilds, for ambassadors and for the queen's race horse trainer, Peter Cazelet.

Albert, a short, stocky man of 46, runs the kitchen at Gavroche. Michel, taller and leaner, is in charge at the Waterside Inn at Bray, a 45-minute drive west of London, in a lovely setting of

There is more to come. Peter Chandler, another veteran of the Roux kitchens, now cooking for a firm of stockbrokers in the city, is to open a restaurant here next year. He is English Michael Hutchins, an American whom

Albert Roux describes as "the best all-rounder we have ever had," and who also worked in France at the restaurants of Alain Chanel and the Troisgros brothers, is planning a restaurant in Los Angeles. And this month the Roux brothers will open their first restaurant on their native soil, the Château de Montreuil at Montreuil, near Boulogne-sur-

Common Theme

The names of the four London restaurants are linked by a common theme. Gamin and gavroche are French words for street urchins; gavvers is a nickname for the old Gavroche, and Francis Poulbot was a French artist who specialized in depicting urchins.

in addition, the restaurants share a tendency, mildly irritat-ing to those familiar with gastronomic French, to use women's names rather than traditional terms to describe their specialties. The new Gavroche, for example, offers chicken Geneviève and tournedos Arlette, among other dishes. Albert Roux confesses that it is his doing.

"I guess I'm a little like a painter," he said in a recent interview. "When he fancies someone, he puts her on canvas. When someone interesting captures my attention. I put her into the frying pan."
The third star was by no means a commercial necessity for the Roux brothers: They have never been short of clients. But for Albert Roux, at least, it means far more than mere money. Earnestly, he described the award as "the realization of my life's goal."

As is often the case, Michelin appears to have been influenced the decor in deciding to give highest accolade to the Gavroche. Located in a basement it is decorated as an English club with unlimited funds might be decorated, with olive-green fabric walls, green and beige carpeting, comfortable barrel chairs, discreet modern paintings, wellspaced tables and lanternlike lights on the walls.

The table settings are sumptuous, complete with carefully arranged fresh flowers and the oversize German plates by Villeroy & Boch that have become the trademark of ambitious restaurants in Western Europe.

Staff Morale

But the food, too, seems slightly better than that at the old vroche, perhaps because of the big, gleaming kitchen, per-haps because the morale of the staff has been lifted by the more elegant surroundings.

Nonetheless, there are those who question whether the Gavroche is the equal of the best in France. Claude Jolly, the restaurant critic of the French weekly L'Express and a frequent customer, is one of the doubters. So is Egon Ronay, who publishes one of Britain's leading guides. He gives two stars to the Gavroche and three to the Waterside. where Michel Roux practices a somewhat more elaborate style of cooking than his brother. Christopher Driver, editor of the Good Food Guide, considers the Gavroche among Britain's best places but thinks there are others equally deserving of the highest

Letter From Geneva Alpine Aerial Anatomy

By John Chadwick

Reuters GENEVA — Howard Ticknor, of Miami, Fla., is a man who goes looking for lightning.

Snowstorms, hurricanes — whatever sort of weather means trouble - is where Ticknor aims his four-engined Lockheed 188 research plane. "It goes with the job," the former U.S. Air Force pilot said.

As part of a multinational team which last week began a twomonth weather probe based at Geneva airport. Ticknor has the whole of the Alps, with all its climatic hazards, as his workshop,

The World Meteorological Organization (WMO) has launched this massive survey of Europe's biggest mountain chain in order to learn more about its weather patterns and what causes cyclones. heavy rains and snap floods in the areas dominated by the Alps.

WMO hopes thereby to improve its worldwide weather forecasts for mountainous areas. New knowledge gained in the Alps will also be used for the U.S. Rockies, the Andes or the mountains of Tibet. Ticknor, 49, a lean, rangy man for whom after 31 years flying a plane is as natural as walking, is one of a team of pilots who will crisscross the Alps at different heights to get the data.

Weather research flying is no sinecure, years of probing thunder-storms for the U.S. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration have shown him.

"We fly straight into lightning. The idea is to seek out the worst weather possible, if that's what the scientist sitting in the back wants. He decides the nature of the mission.

"I was flying once in Norway when I was caught in the middle of a snowstorm. The rear of the plane was hit by lightning and when I got down I found the tailplane hinge bolts had melted away.

"Lightning can look pretty spectacular from the cockpit. Some-times you see a bolt coming straight at you and you grip your seat-belt. Boy, it really hits. With-out your belt you would jump straight out of your scat."

Nineteen countries, including Russia, are taking part in "Alpex (Alpine Experiment), which will utilize 17 planes, 11 ships in the Mediterranean and Adriatic seas. an earth satellite and a host of ground stations and buovs. An official told reporters: "We chose the Alps, in spite of the modest size compared with the Andes, Rockies and the Tibeta range, because they produce most of the severe weather phenomen encountered in other mountain areas of the world." Mountain completes influence the climate on several scales, by said. On the planetary scale, they can change the airflow over a whole hemisphere, affecting wenther worldwide. On the next smaller scale - the cyclonic - winds pushed up and over mountains in their path cause powerful disturbances on the downstream side. This is particular larly true in the Alps, resulting in the "Genoa cyclones" which have ravaged alpine valleys in Italy and produced flood tides in coastal cities like Venice.

Downslope Winds

On the smallest scale, mountains cause weather phenomena like the downslope winds known as the mistral in France, the Föhn in Bavaria, the bure in Yugoslavia and the Chinook in the Rockies. "The mechanism of these winds, reaching up to 200 kilometers (125 miles) an hour, is not yet fully understood," an Alpex spokesman

For this purpose, a vertical stack of aircraft will make co-ordinated traverses over the St. Gotthard and Brenner passes, directly over lines of highly accurate ground pressure stations. A similar exercise will be carried out over the Dalmatian coast. Lower altitudes will be flown by the two turbo-prop Lockheed air-liners flown by Ticknor and his colleague Gilbert Summers, of the U.S. atmospheric research center in Boulder, Colo.

A twin-engined executive jet provided by the West German Air and Space Research Institute, near Munich, will fly upper levels up to 41,000 feet (12,500 meters).

Four-meter (13-foot) long "gust probes" stick out like lances from the noses of the planes and they are also fitted with downward-facing cameras for infra-red pictures weather patterns.

Passenger compartments have been converted into computerrooms with a bewildering array of cables, television screens, oscillating dials and teleprinters. Here, scientists will do the preliminary work on information gathered in flights of up to six hours, before further processing at operation headquarters in Geneva.
